

History Day 2018

An opportunity to meet and learn about libraries and archives

Call for Papers: History Day 2018

Introductions to research in libraries, archives and collections

Tuesday 27 November 2018

Senate House, Malet Street, London, WC1E 7HU

10 am – 4 pm

History Day is an annual one-day event bringing researchers together with information professionals from libraries, archives and research organisations. In addition to an open fair of history collections, the day includes talks on research subjects, collections and methodology. This year, the History Day team is inviting talks from librarians, archivists, museum and other information professionals, taught and research students, academic staff and private researchers. Possible topics include but are not limited to:

- Using collections for research and other projects.
- How you recommend starting research and identifying repositories.
- Projects aimed at helping researchers find and use resources.
- Examples of collaboration between researchers and information professionals.

Talks should be aimed at a general audience, and cover a broad rather than specialist subject. Papers covering multiple repositories are especially welcome.

We invite abstracts of maximum 200 words for 15-minute individual or group presentations. Those interested in shorter talks can be matched with other speakers.

Deadline for submission: 8 June 2018 – please send to historyday@london.ac.uk.

These talks are part of History Day, and will be scheduled throughout the event. For more information about past History Days and for information about history research collections, please see the event website.
